Reasons for comment:

Comments: 15/04/2024 1:34 PM I thoroughly look forward to the prospect of pub competition in the area. I work alongside many pub goers in the Fulham area and we're all in the same boat. We work around crowd control and security for the Chelsea football games and often stand around on the road outside the station.

The area is fantastic and has been for a few years now. The pubs have been competitive and affordable with the high-end pubs being a little pricier and the working-class chap could grab a pint in the Spoons above the station.

Since its departure, we rarely drink in the area, other than the occasional pint at my local, The Captain Cook. For a pint after work a couple of times a week, you can't go wrong with affordable. JD Wetherspoons has always aimed to make social gatherings affordable.

This will drive customers into the area making use of the high street, somewhere the football fans will flock too, making them easier to monitor when we're working alongside the police on crowd control! And what a great use of the space?!

Bottom line. We need more affordable restaurants in the area. We need simple, pub grub, with a pint that's not a party place, that's not going to cost north of £30 for 2 people, and the staffing at JD Weatherspoon's will exceed the staffing numbers at the 3 local pubs combined.

I look forward to sitting in a spoons near me soon.
